NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Dry weather will return to the North Coast this afternoon and persist through Tuesday. Rain chances will return to locations west of a Ukiah to Willow Creek line on Wednesday, as an upper-level disturbance passes by to the west and north. Rain chances will increase by the end of the week. Weak system departing northern mountains and adjacent Sacramento Valley today with patchy fog (some areas dense) generally southward of Sutter Buttes early in the week. Then another weak system may bring some light rain across the north again late in the week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Locally strong and gusty east winds across Southern California Tuesday morning through Wednesday evening. The ridge of high pressure over California will continue to weaken today causing temperatures to cool to around 5 degrees above normal, with upper 50s and 60s across the mountains and 70s to low 80s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 15% and 30% away from the coastal areas and San Joaquin Valley. The ridge of high pressure will become strong Monday through Thursday causing temperatures to warm to 10 to 20 degrees above normal. Minimum humidity will lower to 12% to 25% away from the Central Valley. Local east winds of 15 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California Tuesday morning through Wednesday evening. The windiest areas will be across the east-west passes such as the Banning Pass in Riverside County and the I-8 Corridor in San Diego County. Temperatures will cool several degrees and humidity will increase a little both Friday and Saturday as the ridge of high pressure weakens. However, temperatures will remain well above normal.
